

Resource Directory

A necessary component of disaster planning is the establishment of relationships with community organizations and others who will be expected to fulfill important response functions. Some community partners may be obvious, such as; police, fire, and emergency management. Identification of other partners may require innovative thinking and may be based on needs you have identified for your organization. Examples may be: communication when telephones are not operating or delivery of medications during a blizzard.

The list below will assist in the identification process.
